DON'T "UPLIFT" SHOP GIRL

It's an Unpleasant Sensation According to Elizabeth Sears.

Spasmodically, society has always taken an interest in the business girl First, because it gives its members something to do; and, finally, because society has found that business women are really worth cultivating. But they have tried to help her from the outside in. What do they know of the all-pervading, soul-searing bitter loneliness we know? They es-tablish for us working girls' clubs and Jean clubs, and herd us into chilly infrom a charitable institution. They put in for a matron some needy woman who needs a home and who hasn't the faintest conception of how to make one for the dozens of lonely girls who flock to it. I have lived in these homes. Like the rest, I did not want to be uplifted; it was as unpleasant for us as it was for the up lifters. We wanted to get acquainted They mean well, these women, and perhaps we do them some good. I suppose their interest in us comes at the deadly time of life when they realize that their waist-line will never again be what it was and they find themselves being shifted to the frankly middle-aged crowd at the bridge tables.

But when we have earned the money to buy a ticket to the theater or a concert, we do not relish having humbly to ask permission of a disapproving matron to remain out after 10:30. Nor do we like to have the board of directors come to visit the nome and poke around through closets and our bureau drawers to see if we keep things neat and tidy.

We have earned our economic inde sendence and our right to keep our upper bureau drawer as we please, we business women. Perhaps we have had to sacrifice a few ideals and perhaps it has been better for us to sacrifice them. For, one by one, as we learn how to boss our own jobs, we are discovering that the first ofbread was needed in the house for the day by the sweat of the brow was about the best thing that ever sened to Adam: for it taught Eve that Paradise, even with a well-stocked Elizabeth Sears, in Harper's Maga zine for January.
